Blue and Gold Awards

2010 Gold Circle Awards

Members of the Blue & Gold staff received 17 individual national awards from the Columbia Scholastic Press Association (CSPA).

Individual Gold Circle awards were presented at the annual CSPA Spring Journalism Conference held at Columbia University in New York City.

Editor-in-chief junior John Sisser took home five Gold Circles and feature editor junior Kim Maples received two. Photo editor junior Taylor McGonnell and news editor junior Emily Rivest were also recognized for individual awards.

Gold Circles are decided by national judges in design, writing and photography categories.

Gold Circles also went to the paper's staff in categories like Typography, Overall Design and Headline Writing.

Our staff members work very hard on their specific sections in the paper, Sisser said. These awards give national recognition to them for their time, effort and creativity.

Pacemaker Award-2010

Blue & Gold, Findlay High School's student newspaper, and 2aToday's, the student broadcast's, news website, www.blueandgoldtoday.org, was one of 12 websites to receive the National Scholastic Press Association's(NSPA) Online Pacemaker award.

Just three months after launching the website in December, staff members found out the website was one of 26 finalists nationwide. The results were announced at the NSPA Spring National Convention in Portland, Ore.

Known as the "Pulitzer of high school journalism" this award is one of the most coveted in the nation. Websites were judged based on design, content, creativity and ease of use.

"Winning this award so early is a huge accomplishment for our staff," adviser Jim McGonnell said. "Our staff worked very hard this year to get our website up and running, so to receive an honor like this is very rewarding."
